Mr. Paul Polman CEO, Unilever 800 Sylvan Avenue Englewood Cliffs, NJ 07632

Dear Mr. Polman:

Consumers have long been bedeviled by the term "natural" on food labels. In the absence of a definition by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), some companies slap "natural" on products that, to the average consumer, clearly are not. The misleading use of the term may persuade customers to buy products that, upon greater scrutiny, they would not have bought. And companies that adhere to a strict and conservative policy on labeling their products natural may be put to a disadvantage by competitors that are not as scrupulous.

Ben & Jerry's, a division of your corporation, provides a prime example of the misleading use of the term "natural." Ben & Jerry's, which has cultivated an image of integrity over the past several decades, markets a wide range of frozen desserts, including 53 bearing a prominent "All Natural" claim on their principal display panels (Attachment A). However, at least 48 of those products include non-natural ingredients (Attachment B). Based on prior policy statements by the FDA, we are limiting our consideration of "non-natural" ingredients to those that underwent changes in molecular structure prior to inclusion in the foods. Such changes are achieved by the use of enzymes, acids, bases, or other means. Our narrow focus sidesteps the issue of whether other substances the chemical structures of which have not been modified, including partially defatted peanut flour, bacteria-derived xanthan gum, partially defatted peanut flour, reduced-lactose sweetened condensed milk, yeast-derived lactase, and synthetically produced vitamins and citric acid, are considered natural by the average consumer. We also are ignoring sodium bicarbonate (baking soda), which is used in many of Ben & Jerry's "natural" products, even though it is chemically manufactured.

¹ The U.S. Department of Agriculture's definition of natural for meat and poultry products excludes "any artificial flavor or flavoring, coloring ingredient, or chemical preservative (as defined in 21 CFR 101.22), or any other artificial or synthetic ingredient" and any product or ingredient that is "more than minimally processed." Food Labeling and Standards Policy Book, August 2005.

We found the following ingredients in the indicated number of "all natural" products:

Cocoa processed with alkali (chemical treatment results in deeper color,	36 reduced acidity, sharply reduced flavonol content ²)
Corn syrup and corn syrup solids (likely enzymatically or chemically	28 produced from cornstarch) Anhydrous dextrose (glucose; likely enzymatically or chemically produced	3
from cornstarch)
Invert sugar (enzymatic degradation of sucrose to its component	2 monosaccharides, glucose and fructose)
Brown rice syrup (likely enzymatically or chemically produced from brown	1 rice)
Partially hydrogenated soybean oil (chemically treated soybean oil resulting	1
in trans fatty acids, increased saturated fatty acids, and less unsaturated fatty acids)
Maltodextrin (oligosaccharide produced by hydrolysis of starch)	1

We were especially disappointed to see the large number of inaccurate and misleading labels, because we publicized the issue and sent a complaint to the FDA on July 30, 2002.³ The very same problem exists today. As we told the FDA in 2002:

We are aware that FDA has not officially defined the word "natural." Nevertheless, the Agency has issued a number of policy statements that indicate that the FDA would not consider the use of the term "natural" to be appropriate in connection with these Ben & Jerry's products. For example, in 1989, FDA's Acting Director of Regulatory Guidance explained in a letter that the Agency has "consistently discouraged the use of such term [natural] because its meaning is ambiguous and may unjustifiably imply to consumers that foods labeled as 'natural' are inherently superior to other foods especially in nutrient content, quality and safety." In addition, the [FDA] letter said that a product should not be considered natural if it contains "an added chemical that is not a constituent of the food."

That letter was cited as a reference in 1991 and 1993 when the Agency reiterated its "natural" policy during revisions of its nutrition-claims regulations. The Agency explained that the term natural means "that nothing artificial or synthetic. . . has been included in, or has been added to, a food that would not normally be expected to be in the food."⁵ The partially hydrogenated soybean oil, hydrogenated palm kernel oil [apparently no longer used in 2010], alkalized cocoa powder, corn syrup, and corn syrup solids are, therefore, "artificial" as that term is commonly used.

According to Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary, "artificial" is defined as "humanly contrived often on a natural model: man-made." The artificial flavorings in Ben and Jerry's are synthetic. The hydrogenated soybean oil, hydrogenated palm kernel oil, alkalized cocoa powder, corn syrup and corn syrup solids are man-made.

While the FDA told us that correcting "natural" claims was not among its enforcement priorities, Ben & Jerry's issued a statement on July 31, 2002, stating: "If the questions that CSPI has raised are valid, we will fix them." Apparently your corporation continues to believe that substances like hydrogenated oil and alkalized cocoa powder are "all natural."

These violations cause the products to be misbranded within the meaning of Section 403(a) of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, 21 U.S.C. § 343(a). We urge your company to agree within the next 30 days to stop Ben & Jerry's false and misleading use of the term "natural." Otherwise we will communicate our concerns to the FDA and state attorneys general, and possibly take other actions.

Sincerely,

Michael F. Jacobson, Ph.D.

⁷ Letter from John B. Foret, Dir., Div. of Compliance, Office of Nutritional Products, Labeling and Dietary Supplements (Sept. 19, 2002). We note that the current FDA has begun to crack down on deceptive labeling claims, particularly when labels suggest that a product is "better for you" because of its ingredient content, as is the case with the labeling of Ben & Jerry's frozen desserts. Other statements, on and off labels, by Ben & Jerry's seek to associate the firm and its products with environmentalism and other positive social values, perhaps distracting consumers from the high saturated-fat, sugar, and calorie content of many products.
